

CLICHY ... FOR EXAMPLE

Director(s): Alice DIOP

Writer(s): Alice DIOP

During a whole month in late 2005, France made the news headlines the world over: rioting in the French suburbs! Young people from the suburbs all over France - often still in college or high school - came together each night to burn dustbins, cars...even schools...

One year later, this documentary wanted to see what had changed for the people in the suburbs? Have they managed to pick up the pieces? Have official bodies managed to transform promises into reality on the ground?
Young director Alice Diop - who grew up in neighbouring Aulnay - took the temperature of the area in and around Clichy, the place where the riots broke out following the deaths of two of the town's youngsters who perished in an electrical transformer station while fleeing from the police....

While immerging herself in the life in a housing complex, Alice brought to light key issues: housing, transport, school and education, the job situation, police violence... The film shows that most of the time, those "in need" are not being listened to and their ability of finding and offering solutions to their own problems is not being accounted for...
