

WORKABLE SOLUTIONS?

Writer(s): Agnès POIRIER

A recent study by INPES (French National Institute for Prevention and Health Education) revealed that 43% of deaf currently working or having been in employment have experienced psychological distress at work.

When you're deaf, work presents primarily a problem of communication and therefore isolation. This often results in a lack of professional development and the feeling of being treated unfairly or even of being discriminated against.

What exactly causes this feeling of discomfort in the workplace? How does it express itself? What does the law say about discrimination?
