

SPEAKING TO SIGN LANGUAGE THERAPISTS

Director(s): Jean-Philippe URBACH

Writer(s): Jean-Philippe URBACH

Most deaf people experiencing psychological distress are left to their own devices. There are very few psychologists who can communicate in sign language. So, where could deaf people go when they feel the need to speak to someone who listens?

In recent years, a webcam-based remote psychological aid service has been set up who is also able to give names and numbers for a follow-up. In addition, a small number of deaf people are now working in this field as well.

Isabelle Voizeux has been meeting with Patients goes to meet patients and professionals.
