

It'll End in the Labour Courts

Director(s): Julie TALON

Writer(s): Julie TALON

In France, the « Conseil de prud'hommes » are labour courts or employment tribunals dealing with disputes arising out of employment contracts. The judges are non-professionals from civil society, representing employers and employees.
This film offers an exceptional access to the "Prud'hommes » in Paris with a cast of characters from all walks of life: hairdresser, banker, nurse, sales manager, deliveryman... Beyond any legal infringements, what is judged here reveals everyone's vital need for recognition and dignity.

Outside the courtroom, we follow the councillor-judges and non-professional magistrates who will decide "in the name of the French people." They share with us their discussions, their thoughts and decision-making process...
